Trench Kiss BURBERRY'S FIRST MAKEUP COLLECTION

Christopher Bailey is the man responsible for making the venerable British label Burberry (founded in 1856) a fashion favorite without alienating its old-school clientele. He's pulled off a similar high-wire act with Burberry Beauty, a new range of color cosmetics debuting this month. The 96-piece collection takes its cues from the brand's most iconic product: "It has the functionality and protective elements of the trench," explains Bailey. "The makeup is as light and natural as a trench coat you effortlessly throw on." Colors include khaki-inspired neutrals, London-weather-inspired stormy grays and blues, and English-rose pales. Quintessentially English and bang on message? Check and check. But Bailey—who worked closely on the line for more than two years—has also just created some very good makeup that's eminently wearable, like moisturizing lipsticks with deep, rich color and positively silky sheer foundations. Even the iconic check-embossed gunmetal cases have a luxurious heft, with the solid and satisfying click of a magnetic closure. And like the trench, Burberry Beauty is adaptable to an endless variety of aesthetics, evidenced by the three faces Bailey tapped for the campaign—classic Brit beauty Lily Donaldson, sultry and pillow-lipped Rosie Huntington-Whiteley, and boyish but sleek newcomer Nina Porter.
